

Teams and Productivity:

Free Workshop + Free Belbin Team Roles Profile

Communication breakdowns, lack of focus, poor work allocation, people in the wrong roles and process bottlenecks are all issues affecting teams in every organisation. These cause performance, cost and morale issues in the workplace, ultimately hampering the success of the team and the productivity of the organisation.

If you are interested in investigating how Team Roles can lift productivity in your organisation, register for one of our free half day workshops and take up the no cost offer (two per organisation) to put together your own Team Roles profile.

Why Belbin Team Roles?

While there are many processes out there that group people into different types - Are you blue or red? Are you an extravert or an introvert? - the Team Roles model takes a different approach. This tool does not look at people's personalities but the type of work to which they are most suited, based on their actual behaviour.

The language of Team Roles has been used for years by international organisations in many countries, by lecturers teaching management and by teams in small companies or departments who are about to start working together. In fact millions of people have taken this language on board in the work environment.

Equipping team members with the knowledge of where each individual fits in releases the team energy into the task - rather than expending it on working out how to get on with each other.

To find out how you and your team can lift performance and productivity levels – and to check out where you can make the most effective contribution to your team - join us at one of the following free workshops:
